Achievement summary

What did you do?

This May (19.05.2020) I did the first workshop in my career along with my colleague Anastasia Stepanova and super-help of our HR-team. We made a short introduction in the analyst profession and share our knowledge about requirements and explain why bad requirements could happen with good and accurate analysts. The workshop was prepared for the .SWitCH() students (gratitudes to Instituto Superior de Engenharia do Porto) and organized by Porto Tech Hub and our company. That was great to share our experience with such a nice audience. It was very important for me to show the profession for students (they were not familiar with analyst job and requirements) and explain why good documentation is important for every project.

Achievement details

Please explain the details of your initiative.

We planned this workshop as an introduction in the analyst's world and prepared a presentation with theory and also some learning activities. The students should not only understand the theoretical part but try themselves in the BA role. We prepared some "bad" requirements and the students should explain why the requirements didn't match the requirements quality criteria.

Key achievement

Why do you think you should receive the award?

I think that knowledge sharing and communication are important for each business analyst and I very much appreciate the opportunity to tell the students about analysis and the importance of good documentation. I also want to mention my colleague Anastasia, because without her there was no workshop.
